Film Journal Frailty

1. Joseph Long argues that faith is morally permissible only when 2 conditions are met: The belief in question must be 'intellectually undecidable', and must constitute a 'genuine option'. In Frailty, Adam Meiks and his father share a peculiar belief—that they are the 'hands of God'. Does their faith meet Long's 2 criteria?

2. Is the faith of Adam Meiks morally defensible (like that of Luke Skywalker) or not (like that of Clifford's shipbuilder)? If not, why not?

3. How should Adam's father respond to his initial 'vision'? How do you think you would respond?
